Part 3 – Shopping and society

- Why is shopping such a popular activity?

→ Well, I think there are two reasons. One of them is because of the ever developed economy. We are living in the financially richest era ever. As our economy grows, our interest is getting more and more diverse going beyond just food, which was the main concern in the past. I think this growing interest has driven us to indulgence in shopping. In addition, I believe modern hectic life style has contributed to this trend. Facing fierce competition, a lot of people give up their own time not knowing how to release the stress from work. This situation shoves them to rather easy and instant activities like shopping. It doesn't require them much time and effort but still gives them feeling of compensation with expensive goods, and more up-to-date gadgets.

→ Oh, I think they are obvious. Most of all, it provides efficiency. All those fancy modern shopping malls have a range of shops allowing us to compare products and prices without spending much effort and time. Also, it benefits local economy enormously. Recently, shopping has become one reason why people travel. Naturally, these big shopping centres attract tourists functioning as a landmark or tourist attraction. Not to mention facilities in the shopping centres including restaurants and cafes, cinemas, arcades and even spas, the accommodation and transportation industry also get affected positively contributing to the increase of local economy.

Part 3 – Shopping and society

- Is society becoming increasingly materialistic?

→ Sadly, I gotta say yes. Many parts of our life seem to be measured by 'how much'. Hierarchy of jobs has been reconstructed by the fact 'how much' people can make from it, and this change makes the jobs in higher hierarchy look better not only in quantity but also in quality. Furthermore, 'being attractive' or 'being cool' are all defined by how expensive your clothes, bags, shoes are, or how lately your smart phones, tablet PCs, smart watches are released, also meaning indirectly how expensive they are. So, it seems to me that we are totally living in the materialistic world controlled by money, which is not quite the same if we look back the time our parents' parents lived.
