Part 3 – Jobs that involve helping people

- What qualities do you think people need to do jobs that involve helping others?

→I think there are many qualities one should be equipped with to help others, but among them, I think one thing they need to have is altruism. It sounds so natural. I mean, to help others, you have to see what they need before looking at your own sake. Otherwise, it wouldn't be possible for you to act out for others. Another quality I can think of is empathy, the ability to share other's feeling. To recognize another person's need, you need to empathize with them. Without it, how can we possibly decide to help others?

Part 3 – Jobs that involve helping people

- Do you think salaries for jobs that involve helping people are generally too low?

→ Oh, yes! Definitely! I heard that most of the jobs related helping others like police officer, fire fighters get paid as much as other general jobs except for certain jobs such as doctors. I think it's not fair. Firstly, they are usually more dangerous work, so I think they should be paid more to compensate for their willingness to work in dangerous environment. Also, most of those jobs are in anti-social working hours having two, or three shifts, which should also be considered deciding their salary. Moreover, with the hardship and dangers, those jobs are usually avoided. So, to attract more people, the jobs should be more highly respected. I think paying well can be one way to do that.
